

A safer workplace is just a click away.

Montana State Fund is committed to helping Montana become a safer state to work in. Aside from the obvious, like fewer injuries and happier employees, a safer workplace makes for a healthier bottom line. And, the Internet is an ideal tool for employers and employees to learn about working safe and creating a safer workplace.

That's why we have created several websites dedicated to workplace safety education as well as a site to help injured employees return to work as soon as medically possible. When you combine this invaluable resource with our training, seminars and guides, workplace safety is a goal we can all achieve.

Safemt.com

Your resource for safety in Montana's workplaces.

It's our goal to help establish a true culture of safety in all workplaces across our state. To accomplish this goal, it is imperative to educate both employers and employees on workplace safety. With that in mind, we created a special website dedicated to workplace safety. It offers a comprehensive set of practical safety tips, useful resources and convenient forms. Additionally, it provides a unique perspective on Montana's workplace safety issues and their effects on the economy. Bookmark www.safemt.com today, and see how you can dramatically improve safety in your workplace.

Nojack.net

Get the facts, Jack.

Statistics show that nearly 1,000 young Montana workers ages 16 to 24 years old are injured on the job each year. This same age group makes up just 17 percent of the state's workforce, but accounts for 22 percent of Montana State Fund (MSF) claims. If you're under 24 or have employees who are, this site is for you. It features a number of humorous videos to help young workers think smart about safety, downloadable ringtones, real-life stories of injured young workers and safety tips young employees can relate to. Bookmark www.nojack.net today and help your younger employees get in the habit of working safer.

Returntoworkmt.com

Montanans know that getting back on the job is job one.

Bringing an injured employee back on the job as soon as it's medically appropriate is critical for both productivity and employee well-being. Unfortunately, many employers think implementing such a program is costly and complicated. It's not. That's why we've developed a website dedicated to helping you create an effective Return to Work program that meets the needs of your company and your employees. To find out how you can put an effective Return to Work program in place, simply log on to or bookmark www.returntoworkmt.com.

