Preface

During the 52nd Legislative session, a record number of bills were introduced; 1013 bills in the House, 473 in the Senate, 56 House Joint Resolutions and 33 Senate Joint Resolutions. Amidst the scrambling, over 250 natural resource bills were debated -- on issues ranging from water quality and quantity, renewable and nonrenewable energy, fish and wildlife, mineral taxation and development, to forest and solid waste management -- as well as others.

Due in part to the occurrence of the war in the Middle East early in the session, legislators and the public showed a renewed interest in energy policy and conservation. The Governor, the oil and gas industry, and a major environmental organization proposed a compromise state energy policy bill that included incentives for both energy conservation and oil and gas exploration. The "Montana Energy Security Policy Act", introduced as SB 466, was supported by the administration, farm groups, rural electric cooperatives and local governments, and opposed by homebuilders and realty groups. SB 466 was tabled in the Senate Taxation Committee before reaching either floor for debate. Several other less comprehensive bills promoting renewable energy and conservation were approved by the legislature. Among these were: HB 524, appropriating oil overcharge money to fund a wind farm transmission study; HB 777, authorizing bonds for the State Building conservation Program; SB 77, extending the gasohol tax incentive until 2001; and, HB 144, requiring agencies of state government to "take all reasonable steps" to ensure that gasohol is used in state vehicles. The Legislature also approved HJR 31, directing the Environmental Quality Council (EQC), in cooperation with the Department of Natural Resources and Conservation and the Consumer Counsel, to study energy resources and use and to develop a proposed state energy policy.

As in previous sessions, fish and wildlife management issues proved both controversial and time-consuming for the legislature. Several bills concerning the management of bison in Yellowstone Park were debated; SB 439, HB 219, and HB 390. Ultimately, one was approved, HB 390, eliminating the sale of wild buffalo hunting licenses and encouraging the state and the National Park Service to develop a long-term management plan. In addition, resident fishing and hunting license fees were increased and the introduction or transplantation of fish species was placed under the environmental review process.

Three separate house bills were introduced to regulate forest practices for timber harvests. Two of these, HB 971, the Montana Forest Resources Management Act, and HB 984, the Montana Forest Practices Act, would have required the adoption of forestry "best management practices" and mandated that state forests be managed for sustained yield. The other, HB 991, the Montana Forests for the Future Act, would have prohibited the harvesting of trees by clearcutting. All three bills were tabled in House Natural Resources Committee. As a compromise, forest practice standards were authorized for streamside management zones with the passage of HB 731. Under this act, the Department of State Lands was authorized to develop and enforce a set of logging practices that would prevent watershed degradation within 50 feet of a perennial stream. A similar bill failed in 1989. HB 906, providing funding for the Montana State University forestry extension service, handily passed the Senate 49-1 and the House 84-15.

Local governments were given increased responsibility and authority through varied legislation. SB 189 authorized local governments to establish multicounty Solid Waste Districts; SB 161 provided consolidated local governments with the authority to supply sanitary sewer or storm services or water to a district; and, SB 136 authorized the establishment of local water quality districts and allowed participants of the district to adopt local laws related to water quality protection. SB 55, and HB's 795 and 905, were all introduced to provide funds for local government infrastructure projects. None of these funding bills were approved.

Two bills promoting local land use planning failed during the session: HB 154, allowing a local option tax on transfers of real property to fund local planning; and, HB 815, requiring local governments to adopt and enforce master plans. As in past legislative sessions, attempts to amend the state Subdivision and Platting Act also failed. HB 399, to increase the number of unreviewed subdivisions; and HB's 844 and 744, to remove some current exemptions and place more subdivisions under review, were all tabled in House Natural Resources. The subdivision bill that came closest to passing, HB 671, would have removed the Act's major exemptions, including the occasional sale, the family sale exemption, and the exemption for parcels greater than 20 acres. HB 671 passed second and third readings in the House, but failed in the Senate 23-26. The legislature did approve HJR 17, requesting an interim study by the EQC on lakeshore development standards.

A comprehensive revision and expansion of the state's solid waste management program received support from both Republicans and Democrats. The intent of the solid waste legislation passed during the session was to reduce the amount of solid waste produced in Montana, and to bring the state in compliance with new landfill regulations expected to be promulgated by the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency. HB 160, the Montana Integrated Waste Management Act, authorized the adoption of a state Solid Waste Management Plan, and established a waste reduction target of 25 percent by 1996. HB 858 established a statewide household hazardous waste education program to reduce the volume and toxicity of waste generated by households. Both programs were funded with the passage of SB 209, authorizing an annual permit fee, an annual per-ton fee, and a one-time application fee on solid waste systems. Additional components of the solid waste management program that were approved during the session include; HB 139, extending the existing moratorium on waste importation for a two year period, SB 189 and HB 918, revising local government solid waste management laws; SB 346, establishing a fee on waste generated out-of-state; SB 357, requiring the DHES to consult with local governments about solid waste facilities; HB 377, establishing a certification and licensing process for megalandfills; HB 660, removing an existing exemption from the landfill licensing process; HB 891, requiring financial assurance as a condition for licensing a megalandfill; HB 145, requiring oil retailers and wholesalers to display signs indicating the nearest waste oil collection center; and HB 239, creating the Infectious Waste Management Act.

Other measures promoting waste reduction and recycling failed during the session. HB 858, prohibiting landfilling of certain wastes, requiring local governments to develop solid waste management plans, and requiring recycling of lead acid batteries, failed to pass the House 46-49. Two other recycling bills, SB 268, allowing a voluntary 15 percent purchase preference to state agencies for recycled paper and other recycled products; and, HB 855, mandating the purchase of a certain percentage of recycled paper, were both tabled in House Natural Resources.

Water policy, in particular, water quality and water appropriation, dominated the discussion on environmental issues during the 52nd Legislature. A number of water appropriation and development bills were introduced by the Governor and the Department of Natural Resources and Conservation (DNRC) as a result of the state water planning process: SB 265, clarifying the right to beneficially use, sell, or lease salvaged water; SB 266, revising the Montana water use laws; SB 313, clarifying state water storage policy; SB 314, generally revising and clarifying the water reservation process; SB 386, clarifying that a water right may be temporarily changed; HB 171, repealing statutes that provide for the abandonment of the Daly Ditch water project; HB 382, revising the Dam Safety Act; HB 418, clarifying funding for the Board of Water Well Contractors; HB 537, creating a Drought Advisory Committee; HB 586, allocating hydroelectric power generation revenues derived from state water conservation projects to repair and rehabilitate state water conservation projects; and HB 814, clarifying the law providing for disposition of state-owned water projects by the DNRC. All these measures were approved.

Water quality issues tended to be more controversial and subject to rejection by the legislature. A number of instream flow protection bills were introduced and defeated, as were SB 303, authorizing the DNRC to consider water quality and quantity when issuing permits, and HB's 889 and 956, revising the Hard Rock Mining Act and the Coal Mine Reclamation Act to protect water resources. Several water quality bills introduced by the Environmental Quality Council as a result of its interim ground water management study were approved: SB 94, establishing state-wide ground water study programs; SB 136, establishing local water quality districts; HB 161, authorizing the DHES to issue water quality cleanup orders to local governments; and HB 162, requiring local Boards of Health to regulate septic and sewer systems.

HB 908, requiring measuring devices on and protection of dewatered streams; and SB 472, ratifying the Montana -- Northern Cheyenne Water Compact, were other important water acts passed this session.

The state's underground storage tank program was modified (HB 973) to include small tanks and diesel fuel tanks under the Petroleum Tank Release Compensation Fund. Although several other underground storage tank bills were introduced, the legislature chose to maintain the integrity of the existing program and failed to enact additional UST legislation.

The Environmental Quality Council prepared the Final Status of Natural Resource Legislation in the 52nd Montana Legislature to provide a brief summary of natural resource legislation for legislators, lobbyists and the public. The bills in the status are organized by subject, number, and status (passed or failed). Each bill entry includes the bill number, sponsor, short title, committee hearings and relevant votes. Several bills are included in more than one category; for example, underground storage tank legislation is listed under both hazardous waste and water quality.

For further information on these bills or others, we recommend consulting the Legislative Council's publication Final History and Status, published in July, which contains all legislative action taken on all bills.

The Montana Environmental Policy Act, enacted in 1971, charges the Environmental Quality Council with researching and reviewing state regulations and policies affecting Montana's environment, and recommending measures to promote the general welfare of present and future generations of Montana. For more information on EQC publications and activities, contact the Environmental Quality Council, Capitol Station, Helena, MT 59620, (406) 444-3742.
