| 3. This might be effective if providers are included in the development of the waiver. State staff, with little knowledge of the programs and individuals served or what is appropriate and effective for the clients, should not be the leaders in negotiating with the Feds to create a waiver that only results in increased recordkeeping and administration costs and less effective, appropriate services.. | Wed, Sep 8, 2010 10:11 AM |
| 4. This proposal may have some potential, however, providers must be included in the development of the waiver. State staff have minimal knowledge of what is either approved or possible. In the past, they have had difficulty in negotiating with the Feds and buy into expensive options requiring much more administrative time to carry out. | Wed, Sep 8, 2010 9:15 AM |
