Background Materials and Research

Topic Summary: In 2004, Montana voters passed Initiative 184 to allow the use of marijuana for certain debilitating medical conditions. The initiative required the Department of Public Health and Human Services (DPHHS) to set up a system for registering people authorized under the law to use or grow marijuana. People were allowed to use marijuana only if a doctor provided written certification that the person had a debilitating medical condition and might benefit from the use of marijuana. Doctors are unable to write prescriptions for marijuana because the drug is a Schedule I controlled substance under federal law, making its sale and distribution illegal.

Initiative 184 essentially created an exemption from state drug laws for people who were authorized to use or cultivate marijuana. The measure allowed patients to possess up to 6 plants and 1 ounce of usable marijuana. People named as caregivers could possess the same amount of marijuana for each person for whom they were growing marijuana.

The program had relatively few participants in its early years. A year after its approval in November 2004, 176 people were registered as patients and 66 as caregivers. Three years later, at the end of 2008, there were 1,577 registered patients and 465 caregivers.

In October 2009, then-Deputy U.S. Attorney General David Ogden issued a memo to federal prosecutors saying the federal government wouldn’t focus its resources on people who were clearly in compliance with state medical marijuana laws. Just over a year later, in December 2010, there were 27,292 people registered to use marijuana in Montana. The program’s fast growth led to the introduction of 15 bills in the 2011 Legislature, generally trying to put more restrictions on the program. The lone bill that passed established a limit of three patients per caregiver, prohibited the acceptance of remuneration for marijuana, and placed other limits on the program. It was immediately challenged and tied up in court for 5 years before almost all of the elements were found constitutional and went into effect on Aug. 31, 2016.

However, the strictest limits were in effect for only a couple of months before voters passed Initiative 182 in 2016. That measure lifted the most stringent requirements, required licensing for individuals or businesses that grew marijuana, allowed for sale of marijuana products through dispensaries, and added Post-Traumatic Stress Disorder (PTSD) as a condition for which marijuana could be used. The 2017 Legislature subsequently enacted SB 333 to tax the gross sales of medical marijuana, require the use of a seed-to-sale tracking system, and establish different limits on the number of plants and usable marijuana. The 2019 Legislature further changed the law to allow cardholders to buy marijuana from any licensed provider, revise licensing fees and the manner in which cultivation space is calculated, establish limits on cardholder purchases, and revise procedures for testing marijuana and infused products.

Marijuana remains a Schedule I controlled substance. In January 2018, U.S. Attorney General Jeff Session withdrew previous guidance issued by the Justice Department on the topic of state medical marijuana laws. In a memo to U.S. attorneys across the country, Sessions said longstanding principles regarding federal prosecutions were sufficient to cover the topic. Those principles, he said, require federal prosecutors to weight all relevant considerations, “including federal law enforcement priorities set by the Attorney General, the seriousness of the crime, the deterrent effect of criminal prosecution, and the cumulative impact of particular crimes on the community.”
